Saturday, August 3, was an historic day for Belgrade. It was the grand opening and official dedication of a new park in the village of Belgrade Lakes, appropriately named The Village Green. The new park occupies the triangular-shaped, one-acre space south of the intersection of Routes 27 and the West Road. During the first half of the 20th century, this piece of land was part of The Belgrade, a grand, Victorian-era, elm shingle-sided hotel, with 100 luxuriously appointed rooms, a 400-foot long veranda overlooking Long Pond and its evening sunsets, a nine-hole golf course, and other amenities that collectively made The Belgrade a go-to destination for many of the country's rich and famous families. The hotel helped to put the entire Belgrade Lakes region on national tourist maps (aided by the presence of 2 railroad stations in town, one at Belgrade Depot and the other at North Belgrade). By 1913, The Belgrade had several 'secluded' cottages on its extensive property. Large parties of 10 and up rented these cottages by the week or season. There were spacious sleeping and entertaining accommodations, although meals were eaten in the famous dining room of The Belgrade, which featured an orchestra to serenade guests as their dined. The Elms was the name of the cottage that occupied the triangle [see photo below]. It was constructed next to an old elm tree, which shaded it with 'assistance' from several large pine trees. Part of the land in front and to the right of the Elms was cleared and served as a fairway for the golf course.
